JOHNNY WONDER
Q. "WHY DOES A COMPASS POINT NORTH?"
KEITH SMITH OF N. TONAWANDA, NY, WINS A PRIZE FOR THIS QUESTION.
The needle in an ordinary pocket compass is a small magnet. It tells direction because the earth acts as a huge magnet. The earth's magnetic force pulls a compass needle in a north-south direction. In most places a compass needle does not point exactly north. All compass needles in the Northern Hemisphere point to the north magnetic pole, which is several hundred miles from the true north pole. Since the north magnetic pole and the true north pole are not located in the same place, the farther north you take a compass, the farther from true north it will point.
You can win a World Almanac 1980 year book by answering this question. Send your name and age to JOHNNY WONDER, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1988, (RA) Santa Cruz, CA 95061.
